The demography of Western Europe and North America is rapidly ageing. The numbers of people closely affected by dementias will soon reach tens of millions (Stephan & Brayne, 2010). There is growing interest in the role of the arts in the experiences and care of people living with dementias. This scholarship award invites innovative proposals for related research study from creative professionals across the sector including: practitioners, producers, curators, choreographers, directors, administrators, sociologists and anthropologists.

The doctoral study will intersect and be supported by London College of Fashion's Visual Arts and Better Living Research agenda (www.arts.ac.uk/fashion/research). In addition, it will be linked with University College London's Institute of Neurology's Dementia Research Centre, forming part of the legacy of the 'Created Out of Mind' residency at The Hub at Wellcome Collection (www.createdoutofmind.org), which supported a multidisciplinary research approach toward the arts and dementias, working with people with dementias and neuroscientists, psychologists, gerontologists, carers, visual artists, musicians, curators and a wide range of arts organisations. The award supports full-time study however part-time study is preferred so that this may evolve in sync with the legacy of the 'Created Out of Mind' residency.

University of the Arts London (UAL) facilities include extensive cross-college archives, collections and specialist libraries. LCF hosts two world-leading Research Centres; Sustainable Fashion, and Fashion Curation; the Digital Anthropology Lab and nine Research Hubs including the Visual Arts Hub. Research study encompasses practice and theory in design, performance, arts, curation, digital production and communication; film, media and cultural studies; psychology, social science, cosmetic science; sustainable and material practices; creative business and management.

UAL's research is assessed as being 83% World Leading and International in the UK Research Excellence Framework (REF 2014) for Art & Design, History, Practice, Theory; UAL is ranked a top 5 research university in its broader peer group in the UK and first in the Power ranking for Art and Design: History, Practice and Theory category.
